Skills for a Lifetime

With their families, children learn skills that aid positive mental and behavioral development.

Areas of skill development may include:

- Social (for example, initiating conversations, listening, building positive relationships)
- Coping with Mental Illness (learning about their illness and how to handle the symptoms and social stigmas)
- Community/Legal (learning to use community resources and activities)
- Family (becoming a problem-solver within the family)
- Basic Living Skills (grooming and hygiene, setting short and long-term goals)
- Emotions (anger and stress management, learning about emotions and how to use them effectively)
